As part of the development of the Žižkov freight station brownfield under the name "Žižkov City," Central Group has built the residential project "Parková čtvrť." The urban study was designed by the successful architect Jakub Cigler, while the individual buildings resulted from an architectural workshop, ensuring variety within the neighborhood. The project will include around 2,500 residential units, complemented by a kindergarten, shops, and services oriented toward public spaces between the buildings. Public spaces are also designed with extensive green areas, including a large public park and green connections to the nearby Židovské Pece park.

The residential complex is located in the northern part of the brownfield area on Žižkov in Prague 3, near Jana Želivského Street. Initially planned as a large commercial and administrative complex, the current version is lighter, better suited to the area, and will generate less traffic in the locality.
